

ABSTRACT

A power supply antenna comprises a plurality of coils disposed concentrically. Power supply portions formed at opposite ends of the respective coils are located in different phases on the same plane such that spacing between the adjacent power supply portions is equal. The power supply antenna can generate a uniform electric field and a uniform magnetic field, although it has the plural coils.